ACCELERATE YOUR DIGITAL TRANSFORMATION WITH ELECTRONIC SIGNATURES

FOR MANUFACTURING AND AUTOMOTIVE COMPANIES

DATE AND LOCATION

Munich (DE)

July 5th, 2018

The manufacturing and automotive industries have long been a leader in the move to robotics and to embrace technologies for automation and control. However, these advanced operations technologies have been segregated from information technologies. This is beginning to change, and manufacturing and automotive organizations may need to embrace new solutions to help them bridge the gap between IT and OT, particularly when it comes to helping personnel quickly pass processes and projects between different departments. Electronic signatures can be very valuable in this area.

There are a variety electronic signature use cases in manufacturing, such as support inspection reporting or sales workers in the field but also to verify that key processes have been completed before passing them on to others. This last use case is particularly important in manufacturing as you have to deal with managing the supply chain besides production, shipping, accounting and other departments. All of these areas of operation are intricately linked and balancing work-flows across groups is important. Electronic signatures can ensure that sensitive operations are confirmed being passed on to the next department.

Furthermore, you can use the technology to streamline communications, make it easier for internal and external parties involved in a deal to sign an agreement. This can be a game changer as electronic signatures don't only save money, but also make it easier to engage customers and partners through a convenient signing experience.

No more printing, signing, scanning documents – documents can be approved or sign from anywhere at any time and from any device.
